Cold Water Training in Preparation for Canoe Journey 2018

Contributed by Jesse Beers, Cultural Stewardship Manager

For the last few years, we have participated in an annual Cold Water Training put on by Travis Reid of Oregon Rescue. We do this in preparation for Canoe Journey and other canoe pulls. For staff and on call staff it is important to be prepared to safely take youth on a long Canoe Journey. This is a three-day training including training on ropes, communications, hypothermia treatment and prevention, as well as the most important practices of rolling the canoes, bailing them out, and continuing to move forward as a team.

Some things you can do to prepare for Canoe Journey:

Go online and fill out the Canoe Journey Application!

1. Submit a mandatory letter of interest.
2. CTCLUSI youth 15 and up
(or active canoe participant over 12)
3. Be a Healing of the Canoe Participant including;
 - Spring break Camp
 - HOC Swimming Classes
 - HOC Kayak training
 - HOC weekend workshops
 - Culture Camp
4. Regular participation in canoeing activities and opportunities.

Managing Expectations

Everyone goes through times when they feel pressure to achieve certain goals, behave in a particular manner or even look a certain way. These pressures, or expectations, might have a positive influence, and can challenge or motivate you to do your best. However, unrealistic expectations might not be helpful, and could have a negative impact on your thoughts, feelings and behavior.

Where do expectations come from? Expectations and pressure can come from different sources, including yourself, family, friends, school, teammates or coaches, work or society.

Talk to someone outside the situation. Talking to someone outside the situation, like a friend, parent, community elder, spiritual leader or counselor can be a great way to express your feelings. These people are also in a good position to help you identify expectations and help you work out strategies to deal with them.

Talk to the person setting the expectations. When you talk to this person, it might be helpful to use a phrase like "When you treat me like this, then I feel..."

Have a variety of options for the future. Sometimes expectations are only focused on one outcome and if you don't meet it, you might feel disappointed or like you've failed. One thing you could do is make a circle chart and divide each section into many outcomes you could achieve.

Chill out. Sometimes getting some space and a change of scenery can be helpful.

Express your feelings. Writing down your feelings in a journal or expressing yourself creatively can also help you think about alternative solutions to problems.

Look after yourself. It's important to take time out to do something that you enjoy. And exercising and eating well can help you feel better. Getting plenty of sleep can also keep you healthy.

Avoid drugs and alcohol. Try not to use alcohol or other drugs—including lots of caffeine or other energy drinks—in the hope of feeling better or forgetting expectations and pressure.

This Month...be on the Lookout for Thimbleberry

Contributed by Ashley Russell, Water Protection Specialist

Plant description: Thimbleberries are in the family Rosaceae, the rose family. Many of the fruit bearing plants that we are familiar with belong to this family. Also known as wild raspberries, this showy deciduous shrub can be found along roadsides, forest edges, and streambanks at lower elevations. The leaves of thimbleberry are palmate with 5-7 lobes, much like maple leaves, but way softer and fuzzy. White showy flowers appear in spring, giving rise to fine-grained raspberry like berries in summer.

Food: Shoots, or mæ'yiḡ (Hanis), are best picked in early spring about the same time as salmonberry shoots. Be sure to peel the outer 'bark' off before eating. They can either be eaten raw or added to your favorite stir-fry dish.

The berries of thimbleberry were eaten fresh or picked green, stored in their own leaves, and eaten as they ripened. Because these berries tend to be dry and mealy, they can make a great addition to any pemmican.

Thimbleberry flowers are also edible and can be added to a salad for some extra flair.

Medicine: Dried thimbleberry leaves make a great tea, imparting a sweet, berry overtone to any beverage. They can also be used to treat wounds and burns as well as nausea and vomiting.

Other: Because the leaves of thimbleberry are so soft and durable, they make great trail toilet paper. The bark can also be boiled and used much like a soap.

Gathering and Weaving; Keeping Tradition Alive

Dear Tribal Community,

We want to share with you a very successful first gathering for weaving materials this spring. We went to the intersection of the Smith and Umpqua River and gathered Sedge, a little Cat Tail, Tule, and first Salmon berries. Attendees were Megan Medina, Christina Medina, Mark Petrie, Kristy Petrie, Kira Petrie and Liam Petrie. When we got done gathering there we went to Lake Marie at the Umpqua Lighthouse State Park and had a pick-nick and then a lesson on processing and protocols for the plants we gathered.

On Sunday we met at the Bayview Way Side near Charleston and walked the trails, observed the cattail and sedge growing there (not yet ready to gather), talked about the Spruce roots and tips, collected some litter. We talked about the Place of Beginning for the Miluk people and gathered the blue black mud for dye. We were visited by a flock of Egret. The little's felt it was a sign we should have another lunch together. So we honored that feeling and went for tacos in Charleston. Attendees were Megan Medina, Christina Medina, Mark Petrie, Kira Petrie and Liam Petrie.

Excepting Mark, all of these activities and gatherings were a first for all attendees, adding to the special nature of the days. What you see in these pictures is our Tribal history in the making and the next generation of our weaving culture coming up.

The following weekend, my apprentice, Ashley Russell (Miluk) and I gathered a nice cache of sedge and cat tail for our weaving workshops next year which are currently drying in my studio up here in Portland. A cache is a wealth item for a tribe and we will not rest until we are well stocked for the coming year. We will be gathering a good hearty cache of tules for those first baskets in the next few weeks so we will be rolling into next years workshops ready to welcome all our returning weavers and a whole new batch of beginners.

I want to reassure and remind our community that we always observe spiritual, cultural, and safety protocols when gathering. We don't gather alone or the first time we visit a site. We always make sure we have acquired permission and have someone with us who has done it before to ensure we are doing everything in a good way.

As is the tradition with our Weaving Program Cache, I will display this years cache and the dance caps I am making for the Tribal Youth Weaving Workshop Members to wear in Salmon Ceremony this year in an art exhibition at Pacific Northwest School of Art in September.

The exhibition is called The Earth Will Not Abide. It will be looking at extraction culture and those social and environmental effects created by it. By including these materials in this exhibition, they will work publicly to represent our culture to the mainstream and have the added power of educating the public about our precious natural environment embedded into them. That story will become a part of what we weave with them this coming winter.

We will have many more weaving and gathering workshops this year. Please join in the fun, we are eager to weave with you!

HUNGRY HILL, GRAVE CREEK HILLS

This article is part of the occasional series on indigenous place names outside of our tribes' territories. "The Battle of Hungry Hill" was one of the major battles of the Rogue River Wars in 1855 and 1856. It took place on a hill in a region of interior southwest Oregon known as the Grave Creek Hills. It is notable for Native people as it was a site of victory for the coalition of Takelma, Shasta and Southwest Oregon Athabaskans. Not surprisingly, due to the defeat, it didn't take long for tales penned by pioneer survivors and descendants to twist their loss in to a victory, spinning it into a larger narrative of Noble Pioneer Defeating The Savages. The fact that they lost was largely buried.

Not helping matters for the pioneers and Army was that the Native forces were led by a Native woman (often referred to as Queen Mary). Another female participant was Francis Johnson, who was there as a teenager and later lived on the Siletz Reservation, becoming one of the few (and very important) informants and pre-severs of the Takelma language and stories. According to Siletz historian Robert Kentta, she told tales of her time at the battle -describing the funny whooshing sounds of musket balls as the flew overhead and dancing with a white mans scalp in a war dance.

The site of the battle – located in the Grave Creek hills, between Grave and Cow Creeks, southwest of Canyonville – was known in the Takelma language (a language spoken by the Takelma and Cow Creek Umpqua people) as Tak'welsaman. This means 'on top of sugar pine roots'. In this language the sugar pine tree is yal, the roots are k'wel. For the interior people of SW Oregon (Takelma, Cow Creek, Upper Umpqua, Dakubetede and Applegate Creek) sugar pine was something like our red cedar – the wood built houses and canoes, the roots used in basketry, and as a bonus the nuts are delicious and were a trade item.

Float Hunt 2018

Contributed by Devynne Krossman, Prevention and HOC Assistant

This year we tried something new with the annual float hunt and held it at Woahink Lake due to the collaboration with HOC. We started the day out with meeting at the Florence outreach office where we held our prevention discussion, and covered topics on Healing of the Canoe, Canoe journey, and being a good steward to our lands. We then traveled to Woahink Lake picnic area where the hunt for the floats began. It was awesome to see all of our tribal members working together to be sure they found all of the floats. This was followed by an impromptu story that was led by HOC, which ended with many great laughs and smiles shared between our tribal youth and elders. Having HOC youth there was awesome! It is also something new we have started within this last year. The youth had a blast being able to participate at this event and it was great watching our elders and youth interact and laugh together. We finished our day with a great lunch catered by Subway, and our famous group picture. All-In-all I believe it was an awesome day and I am looking forward to being a part of more prevention events in the future.

Public Comment Period for the Tribal Estuary Response Plan Ends July 31, 2018

The Tribal Estuary Response Plan (Plan) was developed this year to establish the policies and procedures under which the Tribe will operate in the event of a hazardous materials incident, oil spill, or other release impacting or potentially impacting our estuaries. The Plan is designed to prepare the Tribe for incident response and to minimize the exposure to or damage from materials that could adversely impact human health and safety or tribal resources.

You can find the Plan on the CTCLUSI website at <https://ctclusi.org/tribalresponseprogram>.

Please direct comments to the Tribal Resource Response Specialist, Janet Niessner at jniessner@ctclusi.org.

CTCLUSI Assists With Eel Creek Lamprey Capture and Tagging Study

Contributed by John Schaefer, Water Protection Specialist and Biologist

On May 15th and 16th, CTCLUSI Tribal members and employees assisted with an important step in the Tribes’ ongoing efforts to understand and enhance Pacific Lamprey in the Eel Creek basin.

The Tenmile Lakes Basin Partnership (TLBP) was awarded an Oregon Watershed Enhancement Board (OWEB) grant to surgically implant radio tags into a number of adult Pacific Lamprey for long term tracking. Because of our strong partnership with the TLBP, the Tribes’ were called to help capture the lamprey and assist with the data collection.

Council Member Doc Slyter blessed the event with his flute playing. Dr. Ben Clemens (ODFW Lamprey Coordinator) and Richard (TLBP) performed the surgeries with nursing assistance from Mark Petrie (CTCLUSI Cultural Assistant) and Janet Niessner (CTCLUSI Tribal Resource Response Specialist). Tribal members Ashley Russell, Scott Slyter and John Schaefer helped with measurements, photography, anesthesia baths and recovery procedures.

The effort was considered a success with 21 lamprey tagged and released in good condition. The tagged lamprey will be tracked with a mobile radio receiver to determine movement through the Eel Lake Basin and pinpoint spawning locations and potential passage barriers within Eel Creek. The radio tags will continue to transmit location information for up to 500 days.

This study is considered very important because almost all Oregon Lamprey information is from the Columbia or Klamath basins. Very little is known about coastal lamprey movements, habitats, barriers, spawning areas and other life history information. The data collected will also complement TLBP’s Eel Lake Pacific Lamprey and Native Fish Monitoring OWEB grant and CTCLUSI’s USFWS Wildlife grant for the installation of a lamprey passage structure at the Eel Lake Trap in Tugman State Park.

Pacific Lamprey (often called eels) are culturally important as a first-food, for ceremonial and medicinal purposes as well as ecologically important for stream health. They are an anadromous species and play an important role in the local ecosystem by bringing ocean nutrients into the fresh water system, and by providing a high-calorie food source for predators and scavengers. They are also a high value food source for juvenile salmon and other native species during the lamprey’s egg and larval stages.

Additional support for this project was provided by members of the Salmon and Trout Enhancement Program (STEP), Oregon Department of Transportation (ODOT) and Lakeside community volunteers.

Contributed by Vicki Faciane, Director of Health & Human Services

Congratulations to Marissa Gardner, CTCLUSI's newest Dental Health Aide Therapist (DHAT), who graduated from Ilisagvik College on Friday, June 1, 2018. She was one of eight DHATs graduating from the Alaska Dental Therapy program at Alaska Pacific University in Anchorage, Alaska. Marissa is the daughter of CTCLUSI Tribal member Jesse Gardner and Regina Lewis. In addition to Marissa's parents, Chief Warren Brainard, Doc Slyter, Sarah Rodgers, and Vicki Faciane traveled to Alaska for the graduation ceremony and to support Marissa's accomplishment. Chief Brainard presented Marissa with a beautiful necklace hand-crafted by Tribal Elder Arleen Perkins.

Marissa will be joining the CTCLUSI Dental Clinic staff in July. She will be working through a preceptorship with Dr. Rodgers for several months until she completes the requirements to work under general supervision of the dentist. We are excited to welcome Marissa to the CTCLUSI Dental team!

SEEKING TRIBAL VETERAN INFORMATION

Recently The Confederated Tribes of Coos, Lower Umpqua & Siuslaw Indians took part in a Smithsonian display of Veteran's at the Coos Historical Museum in Coos Bay, Oregon. We were asked to take part in this by creating a poster of our Tribal Member Veteran's. While this came to us on short notice CTCLUSI had a very nice poster done that included all the Veteran's we had photos of on display at the Tribal Hall.

We also learned that we are missing some information that would be nice to have and include in the enrolled tribal member's enrollment file. We would like to know more about our Veteran's. Please send, email or call us with information. Veteran's name, branch of the military and years of service. If you do not have a photo in Tribal Hall, please send us a 5X7 photo so we can add it to our veterans wall.

We would like to recognize Veteran's at Salmon Ceremony. Please send your DD214, Jeannie McNeil or Jan Lawrence

They can also provide transportation and can accompany parents and children to appointments and assist with navigation of complex systems like SNAP, Oregon Health Plan, and Social Security.

Peers receive training to help parents acquire new parenting skills, provide support with recovery and help individuals who struggle with complex medical conditions, addiction and dependency, and mental illness. Peers can help families who are working with DHS child welfare for family preservation. Peers also receive training to assist parents advocate for their child through schools IEP process and 504 plans. This program has been implemented by many of our community partner agencies and is considered a best practice. All peer support specialists must attend a 40-hour training program to be certified and must complete continuing education credits each year. Healing of the Canoe Program Weekends

Contributed by Devynne Krossman, Ashley Russell and Mark Petrie

The Healing of the Canoe program is a way to help tribal youth develop life skills, a sense of cultural belonging, and prevent substance abuse. We have adopted the HOC curriculum and incorporated the curriculum chapters throughout the HOC weekends. This year we held three separate HOC weekends on April 20th, May 4th, and May 18th. The tribal youth that participated in HOC weekends took part in many different enriching activities, such as the prevention clam dig event, canoe pulls, kayaking, swimming, the prevention float hunt, storytelling, community wellness, goal setting, team-building, and other cultural activities. Below are some quotes from the following HOC staff:

Mark Petrie, HOC Staff:
Whew! I had a blast at these three weekend workshops. Paddle Carving, canoeing, kayaking, cooking, storytelling, clamming, and crafts. All the things that I love. It's amazing to see how fast our youth grow up; they are becoming teachers and great role models right before my eyes. We have talented, creative, funny, intelligent and strong tribal youth. It makes me proud to know that we have capable hands to pass on our culture, history and lineage. I have high praises for these girls and boys – keep up the hard work!

Devynne Krossman, HOC Staff:
These weekends have been awesome! I believe my most favorite part was having the opportunity to be out on the water with our youth. It was great to watch all of the youth come out of their shell and become mentors and leaders while pulling. I have really enjoyed being a part of this program and helping our youth learn our culture. It was great watching most of these youth trying new activities such as atlatl and carving paddles. It was also awesome watching them excel in every new activity they tried. It was great being able to be a part of this program and I am looking forward to upcoming events.

Ashley Russell, HOC Staff:
I love how this program allows us to integrate our culture into the valuable life lessons that our tribal youth need in order to traverse life's waters in a good way and with a good heart. There is no greater joy in this world than helping youth find their hidden skills and talents through guided and life-enriching opportunities. I am so glad to be a part of HOC and be able to watch these young people carry on our traditions. The ancestors would be proud.

WHO QUALIFIES AS A PROVIDER?

Parents can choose from the following categories:

-Center Based Child Care

(Group care provided in a facility outside of the child or provider's home.)

-Family Child Care

(Care provided by one caregiver (family child care provider) in a private residence other than the child's residence.)

-Group Home Child Care

(Care provided by two or more caregivers in a private residence other than the child's residence.)

*Providers must already have a certification, or pass a background check administered by the tribal government. *

CTCLUSI Health & Human Services wants to know if there are any Tribal members or Tribal family in the 5 County Service District Area who would be interested in providing respite care services as a Care Giver to Tribal Elders. Those interested would receive training at no cost to them and learn career building skills. Qualified applicants must be able to pass a background check, which includes fingerprinting. If this opportunity is right for you, please contact Shelby Clark in Human Resources at 541-902-3822.
